

Sinclair Broadcasting has announced its intention to force
its stations to broadcast blatantly
partisan political
material disguised
as a 'documentary'
just days before the upcoming national election.

Sinclair has been given the use of our public airwaves free
of charge, and in return is required
by law to serve the public interest. In this case we are seeing a sordid
counter-example of this: a large
corporation that owns far to many stations for the good of the public
is ramming
unwarranted and
self-serving
programming down the
throats of those whom it is obligated
to serve.

We need to strengthen media
ownership rules, not
weaken them.
Sinclair's actions
are an object
example of this.

Thanks for your consideration.
